Well it's either they do something about it or the Palestinians take over. And if it's not the Palestinians, his Hashemite clan also thinks he's a pussy and will want to oust him to replace him with someone who is hostile to Israel. Jordan is damned if they do and damned if they don't and they are the only country in the region holding the Arab world together by being the Arab Switzerland. There is no winning move in US or middle east policy unless every side secretly wants Israel destroyed. This is even a shit scenario for land grabbers because they'd be forced to show their hand on their "ally" and that would rattle Egypt to the core, possibly nullifying their agreements as well.

It’s really not that simple. The power of the country is consolidated in the hands of the Jordanians. The writing on the wall is that any formal war will be a defeat, and any asymmetrical warfare will level their country and introduce third parties a la Lebanon. Worse yet, if Jordan loses a formal war against Israel and opens a front that encompasses the West Bank then it’ll be in Israel’s interest to get Palestinians to flee into Jordan. Not even to mention that in a Jordanian loss, Israel can strong arm their policy on the refugees.

The dilemma seems to be that the Palestinian side can't really move in any useful way and it's completely stalled any sort of meaningful resolution.

If the PLO accepts a deal with Israel on Israel's terms, the PLO will pretty much have to flee for their lives. If the PLO attempts a mass civil disobedience, or an Intifada 3 Explosive Jubilee it'll be completely fangless as the Israeli government has built their infrastructure with the assumption this would occur. Likewise, the trust in Fatah is fucking trash for doing anything useful. If the PLO attempts to declare independence, it'll be the same as above, accept with Israel willing to say "Sure, why not, you aren't ours anyway."

>Why are people trying to force a conclusion?
So, from the Israeli side, things on paper have never been better. The demographic bomb doesn't seem to be happening. The new generation coming into power is extremely blackpilled about the Palestinian problem and is willing to wave its military dick around for security. Foreigners that are willing to do something have never been more positive. So, the people with actual skin in the game, Lebanon, Syria, Jordan, essentially have an enemy on their border they can't really do much about without destroying their own countries in the process. The people that did posturing back in the day, based on their proximity are warming because Israel is fairly stable, and thus can be useful to them whereas the PLO is unstable and thus is a money pit. So, they want to leave their positions, but they politically can't without a peace agreement.

>Europeans are buttmad at Israel
Europeans that actually have military power are typically on really good terms with Israel.
>Young Jews in the US are buttmad at Israel.
Liberals in general don't like Israel. But I'd argue that we're living in an increasingly non-liberal world.

>The people that did posturing back in the day
All of this reminds me of 'things' no longer spoken, in a history that begins circa mid-19th Century...a topic I had researched deeply some years back.
I'll simply begin by citing an story in the NYT, if I'm remembering correctly, as that century was waning.
At the time, Germany was having a problem with increased Jewish migration. In a quasi-think-tank-like quest for a solution, TPTB at that time put an advertisement in the paper, asking for territory in which to create a new State for these migrants.
>The area they focused on amounted to a plea to the Mormans to take them in. True story.
Well, this did not happen.
By circa 1896 or so, The Palestinian Authority was approached by the British Directorate at the time to allow Jewish migrqnts to settle in Palestine (yes, there certainly was a Palestine) giving them a concrete promise there would NEVER be a State of Israel.
I'll have to jump forward a couple decades, to a part now a bit fuzzy, but the general idea holds truth.
By the end of WWI, once again this matter became critically important subject, however, so much time had passed, and post-war mandates left the Palestinian Authority with no choice than to submit to even stronger PTB in the geopolitical environment.
>Now we'll jump to Post WWII, and all of the changes the United Nations would put into place...meaning, the birth of the State of Israel, which happened to be right there in what was a place that was to become much less the formerly, and, formally known Palestine.
Forward to today.
As an example of how this works, in 1833 there was an article in a Mexican paper with a headline similar to this: The Problem Of US Immigration.
At that time, with American fully moving westward and beyond, there had been so many US migrants into Texas Territory, that some Mexicans actually consider simply Giving the territory to the United States, and be done with it.

>just a few insights lost in history.

Since he's passed, there's been no more deep thoughts about quantum physics, force-fields, portals, white holes, black holes, instantaneous time travel, quantum leaping...well, you get the drift.
Hence...I've been left to muse in an exclusively self-contained realm of thinking. No more brains to pick anywhere within reach. I remain largely a being whomexists in eye-rolling territory.

>By circa 1896...
It's a bit more messy than that. Keep in mind at this time, Arab nationalism wasn't much of a thing especially in modern terms of Pan-Arab term; e.g., Egyptian nationalism wasn't based around being Arab, but rather Egyptian. These were firmly loyal Turkish subjects, that happened to speak Arabic.

With that in mind, Arab society is historically centered around the clan level, not so much the individual or the state level. So, you'd ask the local noble family. It's very similar to actually how the West Bank functions today when you look under its facade.

>Why is this actually important?
I dunno. I get kind of butthurt when people present these authorities as some sort of focused super group. Like hell, even the Jews when they immigrated to Palestine were at soft civil war with other Jews. It also tires me out when people keep suggesting two states instead of something like "UNITED EMIRATES OF PALESTINE" or 7 city states.

and an interesting side note: the very areas irritating Israel today are the very areas the Israelites did not clear in the time of Joshia when they were commanded to clear out and yake the land promised to Abraham. Of course, Isaac's half-brother doesn't like this.
Furthermore, the Rothschild clan and their ilk, who claim to be Jewish, but in fact are not, have much perceived influence in the formation of modern-day Israel, and for now do wield influence there, but I sense a Purge may be in play for those who are of the Synagogue of Satan. Just wait til the World, at some point, realizes the actual size of the Promised Land, made to Abraham and Isaac, and Jacob, not Ishmael my take on anyone involved with satanic activity: falling feels like flying til you hit the ground. as far as masons, I don't know, since Im not one, but my brother is. Lot of good men there. In a pyramid structure, the small top can control the larger foundation, especially by infiltration rather than imvasion. (You see it in any "organization") Til a new and Living Stone comes in and crushes it.

Genuinely, at this point I feel the reality of what will happen is >Israel makes a separate piece with Gaza under a not-hamas. Either an independent state of Gaza or an Egyptian protectorate with limited Egyptian rights.

>Without Gaza, the PLO loses a lot of its diplomatic weight internationally. E.g., money donated to the PLO is now split between it and this Gaza state.

>Israel annexes C, Jordan complains, but ultimately does nothing since this border benefits them as well by protecting them from Palestinian immigration.
>A and B either sign an unpopular peace as the PLO that results in a fracture in the government or Israel begins to backup local chiefs to form their own quasi states behind closed doors.
>PLO ends up being a figure head with the reality on the ground being a city of Hebron, a city of Nabulus, a city of Ramallah, etc controlling local areas with Israelis lending support to keep them in power.
>Palestinian refugees in Jordan slowly disseminate across other nations and into the country

So, I'd bet within 20 years they'll annex C.

>DON'T YOU THINK ISRAEL WILL COLLAPSE?
Not really, no. There isn't a power with the power and the benefit in doing so. If Turkey decided to go batshit and invade Israel, it inherits a quagmire situation. If the Saudis decide to, they'd have instability in the region. If a United Arab Coalition happens akin to the Yom Kippur war, it would be a replacement of a fairly stable state in the region with a laughably unstable state and a huge refugee crisis again as no one will be in position to take in the Israeli refugees.

One of my favorite settings is a a lakeside or seaside coastline bordered near a canopy of trees.
It was the original setting for the dream house I never procured, however, the essence of that setting never left my mind's eye...which means, even today, I can still return there.
Thank you for posting that, anon.

Why does your crownvirus updates diverge so damn much from Q. Are deaths faked or real?
Which one of you is lying?
